A STYLE THAT SETS YOU OFF

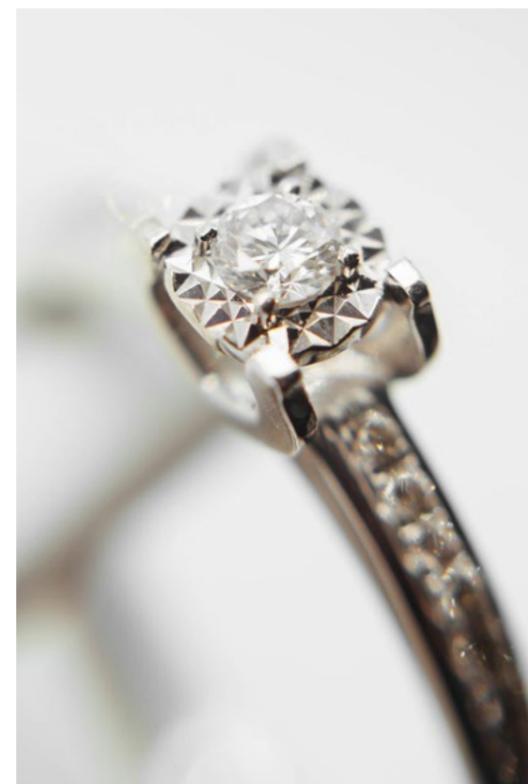

The utterly timeless nature of the collection is evidence that the Mosers were great visionaries. In the hands of Hana Soukupová, the current face of the Moser brand, the Royal collection appears almost unbelievably modern. We believe you will enjoy drinking champagne from it just as much.

LESS IS MORE

The Royal collection was created in 1907. Its design, with its sober expression, corresponds to the New Empire aesthetics that were gaining popularity at the start of the century, at the expense of Art Nouveau decorativeness. The perfection of the classical forms and the decent decoration using precision cutting with a minimum of gold gives the collection self-confidence and a firm character.

PERFECT ELEGANCE

The classic form with its clean silhouette and smooth walls sets off the optical qualities of Moser crystal. The transition from the walls to the cut hexagonal stem is decorated with a band of subtle diamond cut. It forms the seeming centre of gravity of all the glasses and makes them very pleasant to hold. The gentle elegance is highlighted by a thin line of 24 carat gold around the upper rim of the bowls.

AT THE CENTRE OF ATTENTION FOR MORE THAN A CENTURY

The Royal collection owes its name to a commission for King Edward VII, who ordered it for his wife, Queen Alexandra. The English king was a frequent and enthusiastic visitor to Karlovy Vary, to which he was attracted not just by the beneficial effects of the waters but also the busy social life, which made a great impression on him. It was in large part the success of the Royal collection that helped Moser to gain the title of court supplier to the king of England.

Other notable owners of the collection have included the Norwegian kings Haakon VII and Harald V, Icelandic President Ásgeir Ásgeirsson, Sultan of Turkey Abdul Hamid and the maharajas of Baroda and Navanagar.
